The Architecture of Russian Markets: Organizational Responses to Institutional Change Bruno Grancelli

This study addresses the co-evolution of institutional and organizational change in Russia. It focuses on changes in state-business relations, and on the forms of entrepreneurship that emerge in local environments at different degrees of economic complexity and at a variable distance from global markets.

The study engages with three key issues: firstly, it looks at the social construction of markets in different socio-economic environments. Secondly, it connects studies of Russian factories and institutional analysis with organizational institutionalism. Thirdly, it highlights turning points in the multidisciplinary debate on how the social embeddedness of economic action may be short-lived in transitional societies.

Based on the author's own research and evaluation, and a review of co-evolutionary literature, the study provides new insights into the debate on the economic sociology of post-socialist transformation.
