My kind bankers had not placed me in the most fashionable hotel in Moscow, but in one where they knew my comforts would be attended to, and which from its central situation would facilitate my pursuits of information and amusement. RUSSIAN SERVANTS. 217 My first object was to hire a sledge, for, although the snow was rapidly disappearing, there was still sufficient in the streets of Moscow to make this the preferable mode of conveyance. The expence of this carriage, including the coachman, was from four to five roubles per day; however, after using it for a week, I was induced to exchange it for a droshka, at an additional charge of one rouble. The regular wages of my servant were about one guinea per month, but on enquiring how much I should pay him in addition to board himself, to my great surprise, he only demanded five roubles per month; I discovered, however, that he calculated upon a variety of perquisites, and f..
